

Richard Price is the founder and president of the PulsePoint Foundation, a 501(c)(3) nonprofit corporation based in the San Francisco Bay Area. The foundation provides a suite of mobile apps designed to support public safety agencies working to improve cardiac arrest survival rates through improved bystander performance and active citizenship.

Richard Price retired as the Fire Chief for the San Ramon Valley Fire Protection District in 2012 after a thirty-three year fire service career. Price has a strong technical background and is well known for using technology to shape management processes and encourage civic engagement.

In 2014, Price was named "Volunteer of the Year" along with his family and in 2012 was the "Citizen of the Year" in his hometown of Danville, CA. Price is an American Heart Association "Heart of Gold" honoree, a JEMS EMS10 Innovator of the Year and most recently an American Red Cross "Humanitarian of the Year" partner.
